City signs up to international HIV initiative

Release date: Thursday, 3 August 2017

The council has today signed an international commitment to work towards eradicating HIV as a public health threat.

The 90-90-90 targets are:

90% of people living with HIV to be aware of their status

90% of people who know they're HIV positive to be on treatment

90% of people on treatment to have an undetectable viral load

SEXUAL health workers have been lauded for being the first people to raise the alarm about a man deliberately infecting lovers with HIV.

Staff at the Claude Nicol sexual health and contraception (SHAC) clinic in Eastern Road, Brighton, have spoken exclusively to The Argus about how they realised their patients had been targeted by the same person.

At the clinic opposite the Royal Sussex County Hospital, Afra Barrett, senior health advisor, and Daniel Richardson, a sexual health/HIV consultant, had been forewarned in January by colleagues in the sexual health profession that a young man accused of similar crimes elsewhere in the UK had moved to Brighton.

HIV diagnoses in Brighton started to fall before London and for different reasons

Roger Pebody

Published: 23 April 2018

New HIV diagnoses in Brighton & Hove have fallen by half since 2013, according to a poster presented at the joint British HIV Association [BHIVA] and British Association for Sexual Health and HIV [BASHH] conference in Edinburgh last week.

HIV Test Vending Machine Wins Award

Nicky Broyd

May 21, 2018

The world's first vending machine providing HIV tests was among the winning projects at the BMJ Awards 2018.

Innovation

Brighton and Sussex University Hospitals NHS Trust won Innovation Team of the Year for the world's first vending machine providing HIV tests. The judges said it "reduces stigma, has great interaction design, and has the potential to be used much more widely - a whole new approach to testing."

That's all
